

SUPPORT YOUR PUBLIC HEALTH NURSES

Every day, public health nurses go about their work, protecting the health of the 200,000 people in Hastings and Prince Edward counties. At a time when many people don't have easy access to a hospital, a family doctor, or a nurse practitioner, the services public health nurses provide are vital. From Bancroft to Picton, they go wherever their skills are needed - supporting people in their homes, in schools and clinics, and on the street.

Public health nurses are dedicated professionals who deliver a broad range of specialized services, including care for new mothers and their babies, immunization and sexual health programs, and street outreach to people facing addiction and mental health issues.

But now public health nurses are on the picket line fighting for fair wages and respect, because in recent negotiations, Hastings and Prince Edward counties have refused to bargain in good faith and have also refused to allow an arbitrator to determine a fair deal.

Public health nurses are always there for their communities. Now they're asking you to be there for them. Support public health nurses by telling Hastings Prince Edward Public Health to return to the bargaining table with a fair contract.

Help public health nurses in getting back to work caring for you.
